Saudi Arabia has a strong base of domestic consumers, strengthened by a growing population of young people and rising disposable incomes. With the sector remaining undersupplied, the opportunities for growth are substantial. While retail sectors in other GCC countries witnessed strong investment and expansion over the last decade, Saudi Arabia remained an underdeveloped retail market – but one that is now beginning to attract greater attention from a number of international brands and mall developers. Greater consolidation has been taking place since large foreign retailers began entering the market in the late 2000s, with licensed retailers controlling a growing share of sales. “Across the Kingdom we have a population of approximately 30m,” Mazen Qandeel, leasing manager at Hamat Property Company, told OBG. “In the main cities, it is about 13m. So we have 17m people outside these main areas that we can now focus on.” The firm is building mall developments in three regional centres, including the provincial city of Taif.

Standout Indicators

Indeed, the depth and breadth of the market in Saudi Arabia is unique within the GCC region. The population is growing at approximately 2% per year and is expected to reach 40m by 2025. Not only does the country have the largest population in the region, but it is also driven by a young demographic. In 2012, 30% of the population was under the age of 14. Although this figure is predicted to drop to 28% by 2017, it will translate into a larger working age population. In the decade to 2017, the working age population (aged between 15 and 64 years old) is expected to grow by three percentage points to 68%. As such, the majority of retailers will be looking at a growing target market.

Hungry for More

One area that is attracting greater interest is the food and beverage segment. “Fast food dining is where the big demand is,” Abdullah Al Munif, CEO of Al Munif Holding, told OBG. “But scheduled dining is also growing fast because of the lack of entertainment options in the Kingdom.” This is evident with plans for new shopping malls within Saudi Arabia, Qandeel told OBG that a new generation of shopping malls is in the pipeline, including Riyadh Park in the north of the capital, which will have at least 20% of gross leasable area (GLA) dedicated to food and beverage outlets, compared to a figure of 7-10% in existing malls. This is in line with general trends throughout the region. In the UAE, an additional 19,000 food and beverage outlets are expected by 2019, up from 6021 in 2014, according to Euromonitor International.

While the Saudi market is unlikely to experience quite so dramatic an increase, the growth in disposable income is expected to boost the demand for dining outlets, as well as support the growth of other consumer segments. There is a particular need for more supermarkets. Sari Ibrahim Al Mayouf, managing director of the National Agriculture Marketing Company, told OBG, “Compared to its population, Riyadh is lacking supermarkets because retail companies have been investing in hypermarkets to lower the price of real estate. Riyadh with its 8m population has only 1800 supermarkets, compared to Istanbul’s 19,300 supermarkets for 22m people in 2013.” At the same time, the general demand drivers should support the food and grocery sector, a long-time mainstay of the Kingdom’s retail industry. Saudis spend approximately 27% of their income on food, according to the Global Agricultural Information Network (GAIN) of the US Department of Agriculture. With both the population and incomes increasing steadily, food retailers have been reaping the benefits. Food sales in Saudi Arabia are expected to reach an annual figure of SAR45bn by 2017 (up from SAR41bn in 2013).

Similarly, the Tamimi Market Group has set a target of opening an additional 35 upscale supermarkets in Saudi Arabia by 2020, increasing its total operations within the country to some 60 outlets. According to the regional director for Lulu, Shemir Mohammed, there are particularly attractive retail opportunities outside of the main city centres. “The Kingdom’s smaller cities offer attractive opportunities for expansion, as they are currently under-served. The Kingdom’s border regions are especially interesting, as you have nationals coming from neighbouring countries to buy cheaper groceries in Saudi Arabia,” he told OBG.

Another of the leading local retailers is Al Othaim. NCB Capital forecast strong growth for the company on the back of store expansions around the Kingdom and better terms from suppliers. The supermarket retailer set a target of 15 new stores in 2014, which NCB Capital expected to translate into year-on-year revenue growth of 16.4%.

Saudi Arabia Agriculture

Saudi Arabia is, overall, heavily reliant on imports of agricultural goods and as a consequence, it runs a large agricultural trade deficit. Nevertheless, it is also a substantial net exporter of agricultural goods in absolute terms as well as by regional standards.

Farming exports stood at around $5.2bn in 2012, according to data from the World Trade Organisation (WTO), ranking the Kingdom as the third-largest exporter of agricultural products in the Middle East and North Africa region.

The value of Saudi Arabian imports stood at $29.3bn in 2012, according to data from the WTO, or approximately 19% of total merchandise imports. This ranked Saudi Arabia as the largest importer in the region and the 14th-largest importer in the world. Brazil was the largest exporter of agricultural products to the Kingdom in 2011, according to data from the FAO, with $2.7bn, followed by the UAE ($1.15bn) and the US ($1.14bn).

Dairy

The dairy industry is one of the major success stories of Saudi agriculture. As noted above, milk is the second-most important agricultural product by value in the Kingdom, which is also a net exporter of dairy products. Total fresh milk production stood at 1.87m tonnes in 2012, allowing for net exports of 206,000 tonnes. There were 486,503 cows in Saudi Arabia in 2012, according to MoA data, up from 426,204 the previous year; this included 171,671 milking cows at specialised dairy farms.

The dairy industry is concentrated in Riyadh Province, which is home to just over 60% of the Kingdom’s cows, and in the Al Khair area of the province in particular, followed by Eastern Province with 20%, according to MoA statistics. Specialised dairy projects produced 1.7bn litres of milk in 2012, up from 1.68bn litres in 2011; Riyadh Province again led the field, accounting for 75% of national output.

Fisheries & Aquaculture

Given that the country’s coastline extends for more than 2400 km along the Red Sea and the Gulf, it is unsurprising that the Kingdom is home to a local fishing industry. According to data from the MoA, total fish and shrimp production in Saudi Arabia stood at 89,999 tonnes in 2012, down slightly on recent years — the figure peaked at 100,471 in 2009 — but well up over the longer term (for example, production stood at 56,071 tonnes in 2000). Local fish farms, around four-fifths of which are salt-water farms, accounted for 20,951 tonnes of output, or some 23% of the total. Of fish caught at sea, 38,360 tonnes were caught in the Gulf, while 25,583 tonnes were taken from the Red Sea. Most marine fishing is of the traditional small-scale variety, with industrial fishing accounting for just 14% of the total marine catch in 2012. The sector employed 28,310 people in 2012, largely unchanged on previous years, according to the MoA.

Ensuring Supply

Saudi Arabia was for many years self-sufficient in wheat production, an achievement the country was able to attain by means of government purchases of the commodity from local farmers at well above the international market price. However, in 2007 the authorities decided to begin phasing out local production, with the intention of ending all domestic wheat cultivation by 2016, as part of a broader effort to reduce pressure on the Kingdom’s water reserves.

Renewable fresh water reserves stood at just 86 cu metres per capita in 2011, the seventh-lowest level of any country in the world. Agriculture currently accounts for close to 90% of water consumption in the Kingdom, and more than 90% of water used in the sector is non-renewable fossil water.

Outlook

In all, the general mood in the industry is one of optimism. The fundamental conditions for retail growth are currently quite strong, despite oil price declines. While a prolonged oil price slump could hurt the economy, in the short to medium term the prospects of a young population and growing disposable income are leading to rapid retail expansion in the Kingdom. With international players and brands eyeing the under-served market, and mall developers bringing new space to the cities, the outlook is positive for all segments of the market.

With production winding down, imports of wheat and other cereals are consequently set to increase, as is investment in agricultural production abroad, though the extent to which Saudi Arabia can achieve its goals of securing supplies of staples through such investment remains unclear in light of apparent challenges in some of the countries most heavily targeted for investment. The Kingdom is set to remain a major regional dairy producer and exporter in the coming years, though in the longer term the future of the dairy segment will depend on its ability to sustain its water consumption levels.
